Independent Living:

Summary of Guidelines for Establishing a Private Home

By Marcia Braden, PhD

1. Purchase a home in a “neighbor-friendly” community.
2. Fund it with private or trust monies.
3. Look in an area close to community access (bus lines, grocery stores and vocational opportunities).
4. Evaluate the home’s physical structure: number of bedrooms, common areas, baths, and places to recreate. Consider the neighborhood, demographics and socio-economic status.
5. Solicit construction bids for renovation, taking into account accessibility for adults with challenges.
6. Begin the process of soliciting donations for remodeling materials. (Home Depot, Sears, Target, and local proprietors.)
7. Solicit monetary donations from local service groups, churches or associations.
8. Solicit volunteer help for smaller remodeling projects such as painting, landscaping, etc.
9. Acquire information about staffing services for the home setting, including both professional and volunteer staff.
10. Establish remodeling and staffing costs.
11. Establish a budget for utilities, food and incidental maintenance.
12. Total up costs, divide by number of residents, and establish living costs for all residents.
13. Host open houses during the remodeling process and encourage neighbors to attend to meet the residents and their families.
14. Plan activities within the neighborhood and provide flyers about services the residents can provide (mail pick-up, plant watering, raking leaves, etc.).
ADVANTAGES OF THE PRIVATE HOME MODEL
1. They are not subject to public facility requirements and restrictions.
2. Neighborhood and zoning may not be applicable, so more opportunities are available.
3. Staffing, liabilities, and agency involvement is limited.
4. You choose the location.

DISADVANTAGES OF THE PRIVATE HOME MODEL
1. The family and residents absorb all expenses.
2. Public resources are limited.
3. You must find staffing and do the background checks, etc.

OTHER LIVING OPTIONS  (Developed by a project workgroup)
Because of the waiting list in some states for out-of-home placement (often very significant, up to 20 years), families are often joining together to find other options for their children. Buying a home as suggested above is just one possibility. Listed below are other ideas that parents across the country are considering.

For families who are looking for a “community” that includes people both with and without disabilities living in the same area:

1. Build their own “Camp Hill” which is mostly self-contained and self sustaining.
   (See www.camphill.org for more information.)
2. Buy several condos in an existing complex that has a clubhouse, and pay for support people.
3. Build a city version of Camp Hill.

The point is that many families are not waiting for their disability organizations to provide living services. They are listening to their children and moving forward on their own, and doing what their children say they want. Unfortunately, not all families can afford such a luxury. There are many parents who have children still living with them as the parents age into their 60s and 70s. The children then move out only when their parents die. Imagine that transition for their “child!”

With this in mind, it is important to become active in your state, advocating for funds and services for adults with developmental disabilities. After the age of 21, your child no longer has the guarantee of services as he or she did under IDEA. Join with your local ARC to see what you can do!

Present and problematic: not problematic

The National Fragile X Foundation's Adolescent and Adult Project
Potential Provider’s Name ________________________________

Tell me a little about yourself.

Where did you grow up? Do you have fond memories of your childhood?
Tell me about one of them.

Where do your parents live? Can you tell me about your relationship with them?
And with siblings?

Tell me about your schooling. What or who influenced you there? What were your favorite subjects? Favorite teachers? Extra-curricular activities in which you participated?

What is your work experience? What kind of jobs did you have as a teenager?
What has been your favorite job so far? Were you ever fired? Do you have a supervisor I could call for a reference?

What is your experience with people who have developmental disabilities?

Have you ever spent time volunteering? What did you do? For how long?

What are your hobbies? Would you include our son in them or would you rather keep them as your own? What about if my son took up photography—would you feel like you had to do it, too, or would you be willing and comfortable to let him do that with other people that you helped him find?

What kind of music do you listen to? Are you willing to listen to the type of music our son likes?
What if he asks you to turn your music off? What if he does not want to ever listen to music?

Do you have an exercise routine? Are you willing to make sure that our son gets daily exercise—even if you don’t feel like it yourself? Would you be willing to join in the type of exercise that our son likes even if you do not care for it? Would you be willing to teach our son a new sport or activity that you know about? If our son participated in a unified sport (one that includes people both with and without disabilities) that you love, would you insist on being a part of it or would you be content to be a spectator?
Do you like to cook? Will helping our son with his dietary needs be a problem for you?

What kind of books do you like to read? Will you read to my son, even if they’re books that you don’t personally enjoy? Do you get a newspaper? Will you work on reading with my son? Do you have any experience with that?

What are your sleep patterns? Morning/evening person? Will you have a problem with sticking to a routine for our son?

Do you watch TV? Would you sit with our son and watch what he wants sometimes? And talk to him about it? What kind of movies do you watch? Do you have a favorite(s)? It is very important that you monitor the movies that our son sees for violence and inappropriate sexual content—how will you do that?

What do you like to do on the weekends? Are you active? Do you like to “veg?” How will you decide what to do with our son?

Do you consider yourself a people person? How much socialization do you typically do in a week? Will you have get-togethers with friends on the weekends? Would you help host get-togethers with our son’s friends?

We respect your privacy rights, but how will my son be exposed to significant others in your life? If those relationships raise questions for my son, will you discuss it with him?

What types of places have you lived in before?

Are you neat or messy or something in between? Are you used to doing yard work?

How is your current health? Do you have any physical limitations that might impact your work with our son?

Do you own a car? Adequate insurance? What is your driving record?

Tell me about your sense of humor, or tell me about the last thing (or some thing) you laughed about today.

Tell me about your capacity for patience. Give an example.

What are your smoking and drinking habits? Obviously, any illegal drug use is out of the question, but do you take any prescribed medications that would impact your ability to concentrate or focus on tasks, or in caring for my son’s needs? If so, what would be your action plan in caring for your own health while not compromising my son’s care?

Do you have any pets? What kind(s)? Would you consider getting a pet? Would you consider getting rid of a pet if our son is allergic to it or doesn’t like it?
How do you deal with disappointment? Give an example.

Tell me about your strengths.

Your weaknesses?

What qualities or habits of other people most bother you?

How do you handle daily stress? Stressful events?

Talk about your attitude toward life. Do you have a basic philosophy you try to go by?

What do you know about our son’s disability? Are you willing to learn about it?
How would you go about it?

What is your experience in teaching life skills? Are you willing to discuss his needs and set a plan?

How do you feel about dealing with toileting issues (day and night)? How do you feel about private sexual behavior that our son may engage in, such as masturbation, and will you be able to respect our wishes regarding the matter? (Note: Parents should be clear, ahead of time, what their actual wishes are and what their instructions to the caregiver would be.)

Do you know anything about IEPs? IPs?

If our son was having a hard time doing something, e.g., cutting up some meat, how would you approach it?

I assume you are aware that you would become partners with my spouse and I in the care of our son. Do you have any feeling, anxieties, or questions about that?

Tell me about how you resolve differences with others. Can you give an example? Do you have a plan for when you will need a break? If you use other respite providers, will you allow me to meet them? What if I disapprove?

Where do you see yourself in 5 years? 10 years?

Will you ever consider having others besides our son live with you?

What is your current schedule?

Do you have any questions for me?

Last question: why should we hire you?

NOTES:
When Your Young Adult Moves Out

By Jayne Dixon Weber

Every parent’s dream? Yes, but…

You have given your child your best of “everything” for his whole life. You have given your attention, you have figured out ways to teach him, you have created the best IEPs you possibly could, and you have planned for the future.

Now that the future is here, how do you let go?

How can anyone else do what you have done for the last 20 years?

They will not do it as well as you have, but your child must learn to depend on someone other than you. Of course, that is easy to say, harder to see to completion.

The emotions you have are the same for any parent with a young adult who moves out, whether to college or into an apartment. You want this for your child. That is why you have worked so hard all these years.

So what are some strategies for dealing with this momentous event?

1. Make sure you are comfortable with where your child will be living. For many parents, that means close enough so that either of you can visit the other without too much hardship, but with enough distance so that neither of you can visit too easily.

2. Interview your care provider carefully and thoroughly. There will always be issues that pop up that you will have to work through, so keep that in mind when choosing the person.

3. Make sure your child has a daily schedule appropriate to him or her—a comfortable combination of activity, work, socialization, and down time.

4. Set up regular communication—such as daily phone calls—with your child, and weekly meetings with the care provider. Make sure you each have emergency numbers of the other in case either needs to get ahold of the other right away.

5. Make sure you get to see your child on a regular basis. Make this part of the weekly routine, knowing that you may need more visits in the beginning. Letting go is hard.

6. Have a party at the new house for your and her friends.

7. Make sure you have some of his “stuff” still at your house for when he comes to visit.

8. Read books about empty nesters and how others have dealt with it. Ask friends for book recommendations or search the websites of the major booksellers.
9. Know that it is an emotional time—and that is okay.

10. Celebrate by doing something you have always wanted to do.

   Every parent’s dream?
   With the proper preparation and acceptance, I can answer: “Yes.”

VARIOUS U.S. LIVING SETTINGS

There are a variety of living settings across the United States for people with developmental disabilities, and every state has its own process for your young adult to be considered for state-funded services. It is important to note that your child is not guaranteed anything when he or she turns 21 years old. Every state has different levels of services they provide to people, and most states have a waiting list for every level of service. Make sure you find out how your state works, about all the various levels of services, and that you are on the appropriate waiting lists. Get to know your case manager or the person who will help you obtain the services your child needs.

Following is a range of living services you may consider for your child, from least to most restrictive:

1. Completely independent
2. Shared living environment
3. Solo living environment with intermittent case manager/care provider
4. Shared living environment with intermittent case manager/care provider
5. Communal living, such as a “Camp Hill” environment
6. Group home—numbers can vary—with a responsible adult always onsite
7. Residential/assisted living with larger number of residents and opportunities to explore various types of employment and increased living skills
8. State institutions/developmental centers, only considered for individuals who are a danger to themselves or others

Note: States or regions may have various terms for identical living situations. For example, one state might call a setting “prevocational training residence” and another state might refer to the same setting as “assisted living.” Therefore, consider the description rather than the term.

There may be other variations of the situations listed above, but the most important consideration is to evaluate your child’s individual needs when considering a living setting.
LIVING SETTINGS BY STATE

The following is a sample of living settings information found in the United States. Please note that it is not a complete list of facilities. It is intended as a starting point for your own investigations into what you think will be best for your young adult. To find out more about living settings in your own state, contact your local disability organization or The ARC at www.thearc.org.

Accessing resources on this list in no way guarantees that your young adult can attend any specific setting. Most settings have specific requirements, not the least of which is an often extensive waiting list. Some are offered only to residents of that state. The National Fragile X Foundation does not endorse or claim any responsibility for the resources listed here.
